INTRODUCTION

Sporting groups across the Australian Capital Territory regularly deal with a range of issues and they seek help from organisations including government, non-government and industry bodies.

This Referral Guide is designed to help give the right advice to sporting groups. It provides a comprehensive list of agencies and organisations that can assist with harassment-free sport and child safe environments.

The guide shows where to refer enquiries and complaints and where to find resources and services that could assist sports to deal with issues.

The Referral Guide has four sections:

Referral Checklist - lists questions to be asked prior to referral.

Quick Reference - summarises issues and where to go for information, advice or to lodge a complaint.

Useful Resources - lists key information on the web.

Useful Contacts - lists government, non-government and peak sport and recreation organisations which provide information, resources and training, and respond to enquiries and complaints from sport and recreation.

This guide has been produced with the support of the Play by the Rules (PBTR) partner agencies; ACT Sport and Recreation Services (SRS), the ACT Human Rights Commission (HRC), the Australian Sports Commission (ASC) and the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission (HREOC) with the assistance of:

- Department of Disability, Housing and Community Services - Office for Children, Youth and Family Support (OCYFS)
- Australian Federal Police - ACT Policing (AFP)
- Legal Aid Commission ACT
- ACTSPORT
- Sports Medicine Australia ACT Branch (SMA-ACT)
- The Law Society of the Australian Capital Territory
- Conflict Resolution Service (CRS).

Disclaimer: This is only a guide and should not be used as a substitute for legal advice.

REFERRAL CHECKLIST - How to assess the issue

Before referring an enquiry or complaint, check the following questions.

Before referring an enquiry or complaint, check the following questions.

Knowing where to refer sport complaints can be challenging.

Agencies or organisations referring complaints need to know how sport deals with complaints and other options for resolution. People with complaints also need this information.

After identifying the issue the following questions should be considered by the agency dealing with the enquiry so that an appropriate referral can be made.

How serious is the complaint?

More serious complaints regarding possible unlawful or criminal behaviour should be referred directly to an external authority e.g. sexual assault.

Complaints about inappropriate behaviour or disagreements about rules, regulations or committee decisions are generally referred to the sport to deal with in the first instance.

If in doubt about which to refer to, further advice should be sought from the sport or relevant external authority.

Note:

Some people will choose a sport's tribunal or other complaint processes to deal with their alleged incidents of assault or discrimination.

Who should complaints be directed to in sport?

Complaints should be directed to the President, Executive Officer or Member Protection Information Officer (MPIO) if the sport or club has one, as explained in the sport's Member Protection Policy (MPP) or similar.

Generally, if an issue relates to the:

- Club or local level, it is 'lodged' and dealt with at the club or local level
- Territory level, it is 'lodged' and dealt with at the territory level
- National level, it is 'lodged' and dealt with at the national level.

Note:

If the club has no policies or processes in place, advice should be sought from the State Sporting Organisation (SSO) or the National Sporting Organisation (NSO) if the SSO is unable to assist, about the process to follow.

Does the sport have policies and procedures for dealing with complaints?

State Sporting Organisations (SSO's) may have a Member Protection Policy (MPP), Code of Conduct or dispute resolution procedures that describe appropriate standards of behaviour and how to deal with complaints.

NSO's and SSO's often display their policies and Codes of Conduct on their websites.

Clubs may have developed or adopted similar policies and processes and these are often explained in club handbooks.

How does sport deal with complaints?

Most sporting organisations' complaint processes include one of the following options:

- discussing and trying to sort out the issue with those involved at the local level
- discussing the issue with an MPIO, if the sport has one (found by contacting their SSO or NSO or from the MPIO database www.ausport.gov.au/ethics/memprototf.asp) and trying to sort the issue out informally
- lodging a written complaint with their sporting organisation at the level (club, territory or national) that the incident occurred
- appealing to the next level within their sport if the complainant considers the outcome of the complaint is biased, did not follow the principles of natural justice or did not follow the sport's procedures
- using mediation to impartially and quickly resolve less serious issues.

Note:

It is preferable that complaints are dealt with internally in the first instance to enable the sport to take responsibility for the issue. However, referral to an external authority can occur at any time.

What help is available external to the sport?

Depending on the type of complaint (e.g. harassment, child abuse, sexual assault, discrimination) options external to sport include:

- seeking information and/or lodging a written complaint with the ACT Human Rights Commission
- lodging a complaint with the local police
- seeking advice from the relevant child protection agency
- discussing with the ACT Government's Sport and Recreation Services branch
- discussing with the Australian Sports Commission (Sport Ethics Unit)
- seeking advice and support from peak sport and recreation bodies e.g. ACTSPORT
- using mediation and/or education for self advocacy on conflict resolution skills/strategies
- seeking legal advice.

Use the Quick Reference to direct enquiries to the appropriate agency or resources that may assist them in resolving their issue.
